

Waste Electrical and Electronic Equipment (WEEE) Directive

- Compliance Certificate WEE/UP3838PL/SCH

What is the Waste Electrical and Electronic Equipment (WEEE) Directive?

The main purpose of the Directive is the protection of the environment and human health. It provides that producers of electrical and electronic equipment (“EEE”) will be financially responsible for managing the waste that arises from products they place on the EU market. This policy is intended to promote greater efficiencies in the management of waste from this type of equipment. Producers must also be registered with the national authorities in any Member State where they place EEE onto the market either directly or by appointing an authorised representative to act on their behalf. The Directive provides that Member States must establish systems for the collection, treatment, recovery and environmentally sound disposal of most types of waste electrical and electronic equipment (“WEEE”). The regularly-updated WEEE directive is designed to ensure that less harmful electrical waste is sent to landfill; though the regulations don’t directly affect consumers, they do ultimately make it simpler for them to recycle old electrical goods.
